Wife Of Slain Millionaire Is Cleared

NEW YORK (AP) — Mrs. Ann Woodward, found blameless by a grand jury in the slaying of her husband, said today that she had suffered the tragedy that struck four weeks ago.

A Nassau County grand jury Friday night refused to indict Mrs. Woodward, who said she shot her husband Oct. 30 in a darkened hallway of their Long Island home thinking he was a burglar who had been prowling the estate.

Before beginning its 25 minutes of deliberation, the jury heard nine hours of testimony from witnesses who ranged from a confessed sneak thief to members of society's select "400."

Shuffled Slowly To Car
Mrs. Woodward left the courthouse as soon as the jury finished its deliberation and shuffled slowly to her waiting automobile which took her to the Woodward town house. She was sobbing uncontrollably when she moved slowly through the waiting crowd and seemed oblivious of the glare of flashbulbs and the questions of reporters.

"She prays that she may now be left alone with her children," her attorney told newsmen. The Woodward family has two children.

Mrs. Woodward's relief that she was no longer under official suspicion for her husband's death came when the jury filed out and the foreman announced that the panel had decided on three burglary indictments against P. A. Wirths Jr., 23, a German national, Wirths testified that he was attempting to gain entrance to the Woodward home and had walked noisily across a flat roof on the night that Woodward died. He was indicted for three other burglaries, however, and was not charged in the Woodward case.

After handing up the indictments against Wirths, the foreman's hands were empty and it was obvious that the jury had decided Mrs. Woodward was guilty of no crime. Should evidence be found in the future, she still could be indicted but the investigation is officially closed.

Prosecutor Refuses Comment
Asst. Dist. Atty. Edward A. Robinson refused to disclose what had taken place before the closed door hearing but said the jury "found that she was not guilty.... and handed up no bill."

Witnesses who filed into the courtroom included Mrs. John T. Pratt, sister of the slain millionaire sportsman; Mrs. David Gimbel, and Mrs. John Schiff.

Mrs. Woodward also appeared before the grand jury and was presumed to have repeated the details of how she heard a noise, grabbed a loaded shotgun she kept beside her bed and fired at a dark figure in the hallway between her room and her husband's room.

New Jersey in 1955 became the first state to designate officially all of its militia units as the National Guard.

Ruling Of Commission Is Another Problem For South

ATLANTA, Nov. 26 (AP) — The South today faced a complex problem of freeing Negroes traveling across state lines of their "Jim Crow" status while enforcing local segregation laws for other Negro travelers.

This prospect emerged from the order handed down by the Interstate Commerce Commission Friday outlawing racial segregation of interstate passengers on trains and buses, and in waiting rooms.

In the same immediate comment by state officials and transportation executives many indicated they would not be able to force full implications of the order until after giving it further study.

Georgia's Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook declared his state will continue to enforce its segregation laws in all but interstate travel but admitted the job would be a complicated one.

Mississippi officials said, on the other hand, that they felt the order was "not too important" inasmuch as many carriers have already lowered the color line on interstate travelers.

The U. S. Supreme Court in 1951 ordered pullman and dining cars integrated and the railroad ended the practice of shunting Negroes into "Jim Crow" coaches as the trains entered the South.

The impact of these developments was slight.

Segregation on most buses remained intact, however, and both rail and bus lines are equipped with dual waiting rooms and toilets in the South, with their segregated use controlled by state and local law.

But under the ICC ruling the Negroes pausing in their interstate travels or those arriving for trips beyond borders of their state cannot be forced to use the facilities set aside for them.

Officials of several of the 13 railroads directly involved in the order were not prepared to say just how they will meet the problem. The order becomes effective Jan. 10.

The Carolina Coach Co., the bus line directly involved, said it had discontinued the practice of segregating interstate travel several years ago but it must continue segregating other passengers.

R. C. Homan Jr., president of Carolina Coach, in a statement at Raleigh, N. C., pointed to the key words of the problem — "interstate" between states and "intrastate" within one state.

"We are required by state laws in North Carolina and Virginia to segregate passengers in intrastate commerce," he said.

Thus the South, its state segregation laws unaffected by the ICC order, will have two segments of Negro travelers — the intrastate and the interstate — each with its own legal status.

Intrastate travel has become involved in a segregation suit in one state, South Carolina, in a case that is already headed toward a Supreme Court decision.

In that case a Negro woman in a suit against the South Carolina Electric & Gas Co. several months ago won a decision by the Fourth U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals outlawing segregation in intrastate buses.

Gov. George Bell Timmerman Jr., after conferences with company officials and state attorneys, decided to appeal the ruling to the highest court.

Accident Occurs Early This Morning

Robert L. Kling and Holland Edmondson were involved in an accident this morning at 6:50 a.m. in front of McKee's Service Station on South Fourth Street, according to city police.

Police reported that both were going south on South Fourth street. It is not known just how the accident occurred, but Kling ran his 1953 Ford over the back of the one and one-half ton truck driven by Edmondson. No one was injured but Kling's Ford was damaged severely.

This Week's Balance Sheet In The Hot And Cold Wars

By CHARLES M. McCANN
United Press Staff Correspondent
The week's good and bad news on the international balance sheet:

The Good
1. Delegates of Great Britain, Turkey, Iran, Iraq and Pakistan, meeting in the Iraqi capital of Baghdad, established a new Middle East treaty organization, The Baghdad Pact, under which the M.E.T.O. was set up, creates a defensive pact of free nations extending from the Black Sea to the Himalaya Mountains along the southwestern borders of the Soviet Union. The United States was represented at the conference only by observers. But it pledged full cooperation in the alliance. Later, the United States may join it. Lebanon, Jordan and Libya also are being asked to join.

2. Though, history old Chancellor Konrad Adenauer made a remarkable comeback from his serious illness. The 79-year-old leader of the Federal Republic of West Germany was stricken with pneumonia on Oct. 7. It was announced two weeks ago that he faced a long period of convalescence, at a time when his leadership is vitally needed. But Adenauer disagreed. He won the consent of his physicians to resume work this week-end.

3. Ichiro Hatoyama was re-elected premier of Japan as the leader of the newly-merged Japan Democratic and Liberal parties. The merger strengthens Japan's political position and is expected to bring a stiffened attitude toward Soviet Russia and Red China.

The Bad
1. Political tension increased steadily in Brazil, the largest country in Latin America. President Jose Cafe Filho withdrew "temporarily" on Nov. 8 after a job back Congress, controlled by his opponents, balked. As the result, the Congress at the request of Acting President Nereu Ramos voted to put the country under a state of siege, with the army in charge, for 30 days. There were strong indications that the crisis would continue for weeks, with the threat of revolution hanging over the country.

2. The return of Sultan Sidi Mohammed Ben Youssef to his throne in Morocco was followed by serious riots. Extreme Nationalists, who support Youssef, opened a campaign of retaliation against his enemies. Fourteen persons were killed in one day of disorders. France, which had hoped to stand aside, was compelled to put troops into action to aid in restoring order.

3. Soviet Premier Nikolai S. Bulganin and Communist Party Chief Nikita S. Khrushchev, on a state visit to Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru of India, took the opportunity to attack the United States and its allies as saboteurs of peace efforts. Bulganin, addressing the Indian parliament, said that the latest American proposals, offered at the recent meeting of the Big Four foreign ministers in Geneva, had set disarmament back 10 years.

Irish In Furious Gun Battle

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Members of the outlawed Irish Republican Army battled a Northern Ireland police station in a dawn raid today but were beaten off in a gun battle.

The raiders fled across the border into southern Ireland in two cars.

An official announcement said, "The raiders failed to capture any arms. They left behind one Thompson submachinegun, one fully loaded American type automatic weapon, three civilian gas masks, three flashlights, some assorted ammunition and a coil of wire."

The band of raiders, estimated at between 10 and 20 heavily armed men, entered the barracks through the hole they blew in the wall and began advancing up the stairs while shouting for the garrison to surrender.

Five constables and the garrison sergeant tumbled out of their beds above the station, grabbed their guns and opened fire on the raiders from above.

"A hot duel followed in the darkness," a spokesman said. "The police had narrow escapes as bullets smashed into the wall near their heads."

The attacked barracks is one of the Northern Ireland outposts near the border separating the British-administered north from the independent republic.

It was the first major IRA action since Aug. 13 when some 20 armed raiders attacked a British army depot at Arborfield in England and escaped with 55 Sten guns, 10 Bren guns, rifles, pistols and more than 80,000 rounds of ammunition.

White House Conference On Education Meets Next Week

By BETTY FRYOR
United Press Staff Correspondent
WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House conference on education comes to grips next week with one of the nation's most pressing problems: What can be done to improve our schools?

Discussions by some 2,000 delegates to the conference will culminate the greatest mass look in history at the nation's educational system. Well over half a million citizens have tackled the same subject at a series of state and school conferences in the past year.

School systems need help. The nation is short 360,000 classrooms and 141,300 qualified teachers this year. Unless something is done the situation will get worse as millions more children flock to school in next ten years.

Will Make Recommendations
Conference delegates will be asked to make specific recommendations to solve the schools' problems and to include their views on the tough subject of federal aid to education.

James M. Lassiter of Murray is a member of the Kentucky delegation to attend this conference.

The conference, initiated nearly two years ago, comes at a time when the administration is considering revising its proposal for federal aid for school construction. Administration officials will watch with interest the delegates' stand.

The conference committee has been accused of "stacking" the ses-

154 Lives Are Lost Over Holiday

By UNITED PRESS
The Thanksgiving holiday lasted only 30 hours, but it claimed a "shocking" toll of 154 lives.

The National Safety Council said today it had expected the holiday period between 6 p.m. Wednesday and midnight Thursday to be comparatively safe. But the final count of 154 is "a shocking figure," a spokesman said.

Michigan had the worst record with 20 highway deaths, five of them in one two-car collision and four in another.

Twelve persons died in fires and 26 in miscellaneous accidents for a total of 192.

Industrial Directory Now Ready

FRANKFORT, Ky. — The 1955-56
edition of the Kentucky Industrial Directory, a joint publication of the State Agricultural and Industrial Development Board and Kentucky Chamber of Commerce, will be available for distribution Dec.
1. It was announced today by officials of both agencies.

Joseph H. Taylor, executive director of the Development Board and Harper Gotton of the Chamber of Commerce, said the new 200-page book contains listings for 2,837 Kentucky firms. It is divided into five sections with complete data to help the user to find what can be bought in Kentucky and where it may be obtained.

The first three sections list the manufacturers by locality, industrial classification and alphabetically by firm name. Information for each firm listed gives the name of the company, its address, main and branch plants and the products manufactured.

The fourth section contains a list of all railroad and truck lines producing more than 10,000 tons of total annually. Crude oil and gas producers are listed by counties in which they operate. Stone, sand and gravel, clay, four-pipe, lead and zinc, and rock asphalt mines are included to complete the mining operations of Kentucky.

The fifth section contains general information about the Commonwealth, including a county-city cross reference, a list of vocational schools, newspapers, radio stations,
electric light and power companies,
public warehouses, airlines, bus and truck lines, water carriers and railroads operating in the State.

Copies of the directory, available for $3.50 a copy, are available through the Kentucky Chamber of Commerce, Finest Building, Louis-

New Fangled Typewriter To Be Tested

By HARMAN W. NICHOLS
United Press Staff Correspondent
WASHINGTON — Kidd
pigeon and ndgph ktrth sl a ld
yalupdn ktrd, okgke.

These lines were typed on a
"new fangled typewriter."
The contraption soon will be given a four-month test by 24
expert typists picked by the Central Services Administration. The government, which operates some 800,000 typewriters, wants to see if the new machine's "simplified keyboard" really will speed up the output of typists by 35 per cent
as the developer claims.

Mildred Deen, a secretary in the office of Sen. Lyndon Johnson D-Tex., thinks it's a fine idea. She can do about 90 words a minute
now, and is perfectly willing to try a machine that could step her up to 120 words a minute. "If I can stand the pace," Mildred said.

Back To School

Mrs. Jane Johnson, a secretary for Murray Snyder, assistant post-secretary at the White House, shrewd up her hands at the thought.

"Why didn't they think of that business of having all the vowels
where they are handy in the first place — 33 years ago?" she asked.
"We'll have to learn all over again if this new keyboard is accepted. Might even have to go back to school."

Mrs. Henrietta O'Donoghue in Sen. Estes Kefauver's office, has been with the Tennessee Democrat since 1942. She doesn't like the idea of changing her ways after typing
all these years. The Chattanooga, Tenn., lady said she'll do her best if a chance comes, "but it might be quite a trial."

The amiable Flo Bratten, who has been with "junior senator" Alben W. Barkley since he started in politics way back there, says
the government can have its new typewriters if the government wants them. "I don't care," said
she. "I'm retiring the last of the month, anyhow, and wherever I go I'll take my portable which I have taught to spell right."

Hunt And Reck System
But if you think the professional typists are anticipating trouble,
consider the plight of the newspaper man who toiled on the
"seek-and-ye-shall-find" system.

Most of us old-timers type cross-handed, sometimes reaching way to the left, by radar or instinct, or right to find the "W" which is a neighbor of the letter "Q" on the standard keyboard. The "W" has been moved to the lower deck
on the new keyboard and now keeps company with the "M" on the left and the "V" on the right.

As of now we use the lower case "L" for a one, and the top case "L" for a two to zero figure on the zero. Most newspapermen claim that high in sequence.
On the new keyboard the numbers run 7, 3, 3, 1, 9, 0, 2, 4, 6, 8.
What a mess!

But even worse is the act that the new board has hidden the letter "X." They must have left it in the alphabet, but I'll swear I can't find it anywhere. And "X" is one of the most important letters.
We use it to cross out words.

SEN. ESTES KEFAUVER (D-Tenn.),
who led on the first two ballots
of the 1952 Democratic Party convention, tells a press conference in Chicago that he will announce on Dec. 16 or 17
whether he will seek the Presidential nomination. He guardedly accused the Democratic National Committee of being biased
in favor of Adlai E. Stevenson.

School Officials Set Meeting Date

FRANKFORT, Ky. — "Strengthening the Administration of Kentucky Education" will be the theme of the annual Kentucky School Superintendents' Conference to be held in Louisville December 16-17.

Superintendent of Public Instruction Wendell P. Butler gave official sanction to the conference which all city and county school superintendents were asked to attend.
It is being held in conjunction with the meeting of the Kentucky Association of School Administration.
"The conference will be important," Butler said. "No group of superintendents has ever had a greater challenge than the group which will assemble in Louisville, due to the importance of the subjects to be considered and the timing of the meeting."

Butler explained that the meeting is being held in Louisville because of the lack of available space here.
Claude H. Farley, president of the Kentucky Association of School Administrators and Pike County School Superintendent, will preside over the meeting, and Dr. Robert R. Martin, superintendent-elect of Public Instruction, is slated to deliver the keynote address.

In addition, there will be group reports, resolutions and announcements of future plans, as well as a tour of new schools in Jefferson County.

Reports on Geneva

SECRETARY of State John Foster
Dulles, in a nationwide TV radio broadcast from Washington, reports on the recent Geneva Conference of Foreign Ministers. He believes that the Big Three's refusal to accept "apparent" accords at Geneva "may have improved the prospects for future
agreements in the future."
Dulles blamed the failure of the Conference on Russia's unwillingness to "pay the price" for the solution of major problems.

SYNOPSIS
Newly married Lora accompanies her husband, Wade, to his family home on Staten Island after a serious accident. Wade's mother, Mrs. Channing, would have received Wade's father's estate, but Wade's mother and Lora, the bride, were both involved in the accident. Wade's mother and Lora, the bride, were both involved in the accident. Wade's mother and Lora, the bride, were both involved in the accident.

CHAPTER NINE
LORA, ill at ease, looked about the room. Pale roses bloomed against the light green of the carpets. The room was so long that two fireplaces were necessary, each with its marble mantel and gilt-framed circle of mirror above. Fires burned behind elaborate andirons. Fires in a room like this when there was no company!

Every wall was graced with paintings, but they were of foreign buildings, or woodland scenes, instead of the usual family portraits which most people hung in parlor and drawing-room. Turning about in her chair, curious and interested, Lora saw that the only portrait in the room was a large one which hung behind her on the wall at the far end of the room. This picture was oddly framed by dark green velvet curtains which cut down past the single standing figure of a woman, setting it off effectively though hiding whatever else the artist might have painted in his picture.

The figure in the portrait stood beside long french doors and there was a glimpse of white columns beyond, so the picture must have been painted in this very room. The woman was strikingly beautiful, with great dark eyes that seemed to challenge the observer. She had been painted in a yellow gown that set off her dark beauty but did not detract from the center of interest—her arresting face. Studying the picture, Lora did not doubt that if this was Mrs. Nicholas Channing, she was a woman to be reckoned with. If Wade had quarreled with her it must have been a reasonably good quarrel to say the least.

She heard the turning of a knob just then and swiveled about in her chair to stare with innocent attention at the fire in the nearby grate. She did not glance up until the original of the portrait stood beside her.

"Mrs. Tyler?" said a cool voice which carried no hint of welcome in it, and Lora looked into a face that was far less beautiful than that of the woman in the portrait. Indeed, the artist had flattered her outrageously in his painting. This woman's mouth was too large, albeit the lips were as red as the painted ones of the picture, and she had a faint hump to her large, straight nose. Only her eyes were the eyes of the portrait, dark and arresting, but far more vital in life.

Lora gave her hand into the long-fingered one that was held out to her. Mrs. Channing barely touched her fingers and then withdrew her own hand quickly. She went to sit in a damask chair opposite Lora and regarded her guest with a look that was appraising and far from friendly. Unlike the vivid figure in the portrait, she wore black with a great hoop skirt; black relieved only by the jade of her long earrings, and the jade and gold brooch at the V of her gown.

"It is very kind of you to see me," Lora faltered, sensing for the first time that there might be a frosty front in her appearance here. If Wade brooked no friendship with the Channing household, it was equally possible that Mrs. Channing bore him a similar ill will.

"I will tell you at once why I'm here," Lora said. "I would like very much to purchase one of your puppies. I want it for Jenny Tyler."

A hint of surprise flickered across Mrs. Channing's face and there was a barely perceptible softening to amusement of her full red mouth.

"I will gladly give you your choice of a puppy if you can make Amanda Tyler accept it in her house," said Mrs. Channing directly.

Lora raised her chin ever so slightly. "I see no reason why she should not accept it."

The woman in the chair opposite related against its back and her laughter was sudden and rich and unrestrained. Morgan Channing did not laugh like a well-bred lady and Lora was relieved at the sound.

"I'll confess that I didn't expect to like you," Mrs. Channing said. "But I think I'm going to."

Lora's look must have been one of inquiry because Mrs. Channing smiled warmly and went on:

"How does Wade feel about this fighting, now that he's had a taste of it himself?" Mrs. Channing asked.

"He hates it, too," Lora said. Mrs. Channing, as a near neighbor, if not a friend, probably knew well enough that Wade had gone to war driven by the pain of his wife's death. He had not wanted to fight, but only to escape—perhaps even in death.

Mrs. Channing nodded sympathetically.

BACKSTAIRS AT THE WHITEHOUSE

By MERRIMAN SMITH
United Press White House Writer
GETTYSBURG, Pa. — Backstairs at the Gettysburg White House: Lots of mysterious electronic equipment is spotted around Camp David, where President Eisenhower met earlier this week with the cabinet and the National Security Council.

There is a tall white radar tower used for transmitting microwave signals back to Washington. There is a similar tower in Gettysburg. As far as the Gettysburg tower is concerned, the first thought by persons not on the White House staff was that this elaborate equipment was intended for television networks.

This turned out to be untrue. The microwave equipment is for transmission of secret White House messages.

The President's visit to Camp David to meet the Security Council and the cabinet produced a housing boom — and shortage — in Thurmont, the nearest town to the camp.

Most of the press, radio and photographic party accompanying the President was accommodated in two motel camps—Hoover and Shangri La, both commercial establishments.

A number of the press and picture party could not be accommodated at Thurmont and had to return to Gettysburg for the one evening Mr. Eisenhower spent at his camp.

The helicopter landing area at Camp David was a chilly bog when the egg beaters from Washington arrived with cabinet and security council members Monday afternoon.

Lt. Col. William Draper, the President's pilot and Air Force aide, stood on the muddy airfield and marveled at the ability of the helicopter pilots to put their ships down on such a small area.

The helicopter pilots were not nearly as afraid of the wind blowing over the mountain top as they were of the possibility that the steady wind might change into strong, ugly gusts.

When he can spare the time Draper plans to take some training in helicopters. He has been told that a pilot of conventional aircraft can qualify in helicopter operation with 10 hours of instruction.

Regardless of how talented Draper may become in opening the whirly birds, he has no intention of hauling the President in them. Draper doesn't like the idea of working with one motor when the President is involved.

Tremendous Advances Highlight Sixty Years Of X-Ray

The startling discovery of X-ray by Professor Roentgen is portrayed above.

The X-ray, "eye" of the radiologist or X-ray physician in modern diagnostic medicine, is 60 years old. The ray was discovered November 8, 1895, when German physicist professor Wilhelm Conrad Roentgen was working in a small laboratory at the University of Wurzburg. Since then, this medical specialty has grown to the point where some 40 to 50 million people will have been X-rayed in 1955, according to the American College of Radiology. Roentgen, described as "an experimental physicist of the old school," had built most of his own equipment and was working alone in the laboratory at the time of the discovery. The fifty-year-old scientist was repeating experiments of two earlier physicists, Hertz and Lenard, with cathode rays.

In experimenting he held solid objects between a charged vacuum tube and a screen coated with a fluorescent chemical. When the energy passed from the tube through the solid articles including his own hand, Roentgen realized he must be dealing with a new kind of ray. In the last experiment flesh and bones were outlined as on a modern fluoroscopic screen. Roentgen concluded from this that he had found a ray hitherto unknown. He called it the "x" ray for "unknown quantity." Scientists since then have renamed his extra-short-energy wave the Roentgen ray.

When the news was finally announced it spread rapidly through the civilized world.

One of first X-ray machines in 1896 took 20 minutes to X-ray above patient's hand.

In February 1896 a school of applied sciences in Cleveland, Ohio reported that "an excellent X-ray photograph of the hand and arm was obtained with an exposure of twenty minutes." In contrast, today there is a new X-ray machine that is so fast it can even clearly picture on X-ray film a continually moving heart. The rapid exposure is made in only 1,000th of a second.

Three killed and two injured was the toll when these pictures of The Searcher, a U. S. Navy radar picket ship which burned 125 miles southeast of New York, were made. A fuel tank explosion caused the fire, which burned for six hours. (International Soundphotos)
